

Yann Martel's *Life of Pi – have the book read by the first day of class. Students need to buy their own. If money is really an issue, they may come see me, and we'll work something out. The Schertz library has stocked up on some extra copies, so students might be able to get a copy from there if they act quickly. There will be an objective (did you read it) test the first week of school.

Edith Hamilton's *Mythology – download the packet at the link on my website and have it done by the first day. If students want to check out a school copy of the book, they may come by my room before or after school, or during 5th lunch starting tomorrow (May 20th). We only have so many copies, and they are first-come, first-served.

Biblical Allusions – I will be adding one final assignment, an exploration of several Biblical allusions that are part of the literature that we will be reading next year. Hopefully, I will have this done before the end of the school year. I will definitely have it posted by the end of June.
